When a deer is much hunted his car become exceedingly acute. Mr. Van Dyke, of San Diego, California, has seen deer's eyes are marvelously quick, and the fact that he is generally at rest while the hunter is moving gives him an im-mence advantage. Even the slow lifting of your head over a ridge, or the slow dragging of your limbs over the trunk of a tree, or the slow advance of your creeping body along the ground, is almost instantly detected, unless the motion hap-

Dyke, of San Diego, California, has seen one spring from its bed and run away at raco-horse speed before he was within two hundred yards of the animal, although he had not touched a single bush or twig in approaching the game, and although he was positive that a man could not at twenty yards distance have heard the soft tread of maccasins on the light snow. Deer, too, are able to measure with intuitive correctness the distance and character of sounds. They will often lie all day within the formal sound of the woodman's ax and the shouts of the teamster. As a rule, too, the crash of the squirrel's jump, the roar of thunder, the snapping of trees with frosts, their creaking or falling in the wind, does not alarm them in the least. Yet the faintthe snapping of trees with frosts, their creaking or falling in the wind, does not alarm them in the least. Yet the faintest results are placed in the same of the leaves beneath the hunter's moccasin may send them flying. A deer can always see a long way. On one occasion Mr. Van Dyke saw one watching a brother sportsman nearly a mile away, whose motions he could hardly make out. It is true that for recognizing objects at rest, the eyes of a deer are about as dull as those of a deg. If undalarmed he will not distinguish a man from a stump on open ground, if the man is seated and perfectly motionless. On the other hand, to catch a motion the deer's eyes are marvelously quick, and the fact that he is generally at rest while.
